Home-Centered Gospel Learning & Living

Seeking Greater Personal Revelation

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

LOREN D. MARKS joined the Brigham Young University School of Family Life in 2015, after thirteen years at Louisiana State University. Loren received his BS and MS degrees from BYU and his PhD from the University of Delaware. He is codirector of the American Families of Faith Project and coauthor of Religion and Families. Loren and his wife, Sandra, married in 1995 and are the parents of five children.

DAVID C. DOLLAHITE is a professor of family life at Brigham Young University, where he teaches classes and conducts research on the links between religion and family life. He is codirector of the American Families of Faith Project. He obtained a bachelor's degree in family life and a master's degree in marriage and family therapy from BYU and a doctorate in family studies from the University of Minnesota. David and his wife, Mary, are the parents of seven kids. He is a coauthor of Strengths in Diverse Families of Faith.

PROVO, UTAH, AND SALT LAKE CITY— Regarding the newly introduced Come, Follow Me curriculum, President Russell M. Nelson testified of its potential to “unleash the power of families.” This inspired guidance inherently promises that we will strengthen our families as we seek gospel worship and sacred revelatory experiences together in our homes. How can we maximize this promise?

Using both a spiritual and a social science perspective, authors Loren D. Marks and David C. Dollahite answer this question—through a variety of anecdotes from real-life members, counsel from prophets and apostles, and even examples from devoted members of other faiths.

Throughout this book readers learn ways to improve worship in their homes, including how to receive revelation, experience it with family members, sanctify the Sabbath, engage family members in Come, Follow Me, connect with Heavenly Father, and much more. Like those in this book who shared their stories, as readers embrace the Church's home-centered gospel initiative, they will see revelation flourish in their lives.
